

Panama Clinics - 2 For Tuesday we returned to Cuipo and provided health services for more people.

waiting for breakfast and prepared lunch waiting for ferry recycled USA school bus for local use people waiting for us and government updated sign of government services

some of government doctors

Stephanie at triage

Kyle at triage

Clyde at glasses

For Wednesday and Thursday our clinics were held at Escobar, a town through which we passed the other days.

waiting again for breakfast view of old Gatun locks from bridge

Ready for us to start our clinic.

Gatun Dam, power plant

Escobar site at local clinic buildings

Special government imaging van and power trailer deployed by First Lady of Panama

DESPACHO PRIMERA DAMA REPÚBLICA DE PANAMÁ

It was at all four sites and provided mammograms, EKG, and other special health services.

sign with obvious health message tobacco use ages the face prematurely supplies waiting for room assignment registration

government blood pressure check

Kyle at pharmacy

Meghan at triage, pulse oximeter

Stephanie at triage, taking temperature

Meghan testing blood sugar

Crowd, Clyde at glasses, and supplies, sorted by strength crossing old canal on bridge that rotates into place traffic waiting to cross new canal

We spent much time waiting to cross the canal by ferry or locks.
The new bridge will be loved.

traffic crossing new canal on top of lock gates in parallel; ship in far distance

At the new canal the gates slide into position for one-way traffic on top of each gate.

At the old canal the single lane bridges rotate into position for one-way traffic.

Operation of the old canal traffic bridge as seen from an educational cruise ship (Semester At Sea) on 24 December 2013. (same lock gates, 05 and 06, as on first page of this report and upper left of this page)

We bought fresh pineapples on ferry trading places with this empty ferry crowd waiting at Escobal on Thursday

check-in weight

check-in height

FundAyuda doing check-in

Meghan treating foot wound at triage

Patti at triage

Meghan checking blood pressure

Stephanie checking temperature

Kyle and pulse-oximeter on finger trying to feed de-worming tablet to child

Amethyst at pharmacy

pharmacy check-in, government workers and supplies

Vertical streaks are from intense early afternoon rain. Falling water near car.

Stopped traffic because of flooded streets in Colon. It took us 4 hours to return to MIT dorms from the Escobal clinic on Thursday.

During the four days of clinics there were more than a thousand patients, of whom Project C.U.R.E. served 834. The First Lady's Mobile Clinic did 107 mammograms, 170 EKGs, 59 ultrasounds, 97 HIV Rapid Tests. 604 patients visited the pharmacy with prescriptions and received double that number of medications. Report by Dr. Ed Holroyd, 26 August 2018